Order Patent and Trademark File Histories Through Dialog

Thomson File Histories are now available directly through Dialog. Combined with the comprehensive patent and trademark information on Dialog, file histories give you the most complete view of a patent or trademark and its history in one place. When searching in the following patent and trademark databases, a link to an online order form is displayed in your search results, saving you time in obtaining the file histories you need.

Thomson File Histories are available from the following Dialog databases:

- CLAIMS/Current Patent Legal Status (File 123)
- CLAIMS/U.S. Patents (File 340)
- Chinese Patent Abstracts in English (File 344)
- Derwent Patents Citation Index (File 342)
- Derwent World Patents Index (for users in Japan) (File 352)
- Derwent World Patents Index First View (File 331)
- Derwent World Patents Index (File 351)
- Derwent World Patents Index (File 350)
- Ei EnCompassPat (File 353)
- European Patents Fulltext (File 348)
- French Patents (File 371)
- German Patents Fulltext (File 324)
- IMS Patent Focus (File 447, 947)
- INPADOC/Family and Legal Status (File 345)
- JAPIO - Patent Abstracts of Japan (File 347)
- LitAlert (File 670)
- U.S. Patents Fulltext (1971-1975) (File 652)

Quality-management gurus have always assumed that maintaining product quality would improve profitability. It turns out that they are correct.

Quality has long been a mantra of the U.S. lodging industry. Countless hotel properties have spent time and money on quality assurance, benchmarking, assessing the cost of error, continuous improvement, and total quality management-among other quality-related programs and tactics. (1) Most quality-assurance endeavors, however, seemed to assume that quality management is inherently worthwhile or presumed that quality would necessarily improve profitability. Few, however, offered direct evidence to support a relationship between improved quality and enhanced profitability. Indeed, with the arcane processes of quality circles and analyses of cost of quality and cost of error, one could argue that quality assurance as it developed in the late 1980s could become a process so tangled and expensive that one would be hard-pressed to show its financial benefits.

The idea that revenue is bolstered by product quality is inherently logical, however. This article seeks to establish a connection between quality management and financial success. The study on which this article is based analyzed three years of quality and operational-performance data from 1,135 franchised Holiday Inn hotels to determine the relationship between product quality and operational performance. After a review of relevant literature, this article describes the Holiday Inn study, provides an analysis of the relationship between quality and operational performance, and discusses managerial implications.

The Quality Premium

Although most quality-management articles did not seek to establish how quality improvement would enhance revenues, such research does exist. Research on the relationship between quality and financial performance began in the 1970s with studies on the Profit Impact of Marketing Strategies (PIMS). The PIMS researchers studied the effects of various marketing strategies on financial performance at over 500 corporations and found a strong link between perceived product or service quality and financial indicators. (2) Financial performance is affected by higher quality in two ways: (1) firms can charge a premium price and (2) firms can increase market share. Although quality does not always have a direct impact on return on investment (ROI), the increase on market share may indirectly influence ROI. (3)

Although researchers have found strong links among financial performance, product and service quality, and customer satisfaction at the corporate level, no one has addressed the link between financial performance and quality at the property level. The research described here addressed this matter by examining the relationship between product quality and operational performance at hotels franchised by Holiday Inn Worldwide.

Studying Performance

Holiday Inn Worldwide franchises or manages over 1,500 properties in the United States and Canada. Most, over 1,200 hotels, are franchised, and those properties form the basis of this study. Holiday Inn Worldwide maintained data on the operational and quality performance of all hotels and provided three years of data (February 1990--January 1993) for this study. To study the link between quality and performance, I developed definitions of product or service quality and operational performance.

Quality, defined. Hotels typically measure quality through inspections and with customer-satisfaction data. Inspections are usually conducted by the company itself, although some firms also use external inspection services. Holiday Inn Worldwide's own inspectors conducted regular quality-assurance inspections of hotels in its system during the study period. The results from the quality-assurance inspections were used as the indicator of product quality.

The chain's quality-assurance reports covered 19 different areas in the following four categories: rules of operation (4 areas); commercial facilities (10 areas), guest rooms (2 areas), and service (3 areas). Each area typically consists of 10 to 12 individual items on which the property could be rated as passing or failing. The number of deficiencies in each area determined whether a hotel passed or failed its inspection.

Trained Holiday Inn quality auditors conduct semi-annual inspections. The company conducts regular training sessions for its inspectors to ensure consistency and moves inspectors to different regions every few years to reduce the possibility of bias. Inspections are not announced, and inspectors would typically spend a day performing the audit. Hotels receive reports detailing the results of the audit and are given an overall rating of acceptable, marginal, or unacceptable.

RevPAR rating. The study gauged operating performance using revenue per available room (RevPAR) because that statistic reflects performance in both occupancy and rate. The RevPAR figures were normalized, however, using a market index. While RevPAR is a valuable performance measure, it does not reflect differences in local conditions that affect hotel occupancy and drive ADR. For example, hotels in high-price areas tend to have a much higher RevPAR than hotels in low-price areas. To account for this weakness, a market index for each hotel was developed using competitive data obtained from Smith Travel Accommodations Reports (STAR Reports).

Holiday Inn hotels subscribed to the STAR Reports to obtain individual revenue reports for each of its United States and Canadian properties. The STAR Reports were used to calculate the RevPAR for the immediate mid-scale competitors for each Holiday Inn property. This information was then used to develop a market index so that the RevPAR for various properties could be compared.

The first step in developing the market index was to find the national RevPAR average of all the competitive properties. Next, I developed a market index for each Holiday Inn hotel by dividing the RevPAR of the immediate mid-scale competition by the average national RevPAR. I used a market index of 1.0 as the dividing line between high-price areas and low-price areas. For example, hotels in the San Francisco Bay area had market indices over 1.4 while hotels in rural Arkansas had market indices below 0.8. I then divided each Holiday Inn hotel's RevPAR by its market index to develop a market-adjusted RevPAR, which could be compared against the market-adjusted RevPARs of the other Holiday Inn properties.

The analysis comprised a total of 1,135 franchised hotels that were in operation at the beginning of 1990. The study excluded terminated hotels, company-owned and -managed hotels, and hotels with incomplete data. The analysis was conducted using six-month intervals from February 1990 through January 1993. (That is, intervals began in February 1990, August 1990, February 1991, August 1991, February 1992, and August 1992.) The number of defects in each area for each subject hotel came from the most recent quality-assurance report for each test interval. The market-adjusted RevPAR for each of the subject properties was calculated from financial data for the six months prior to and the six months after each test date.

Analysis of the Quality-assurance Reports

The study chiefly analyzed each quality-assurance report's rating of the hotels' physical facilities. That included common facilities (i.e., lobby, public restrooms, dining facilities, lounge facilities, corridors, recreation area, meeting area, kitchen, exterior, back-of-house) and guest rooms (i.e., guest room and guest bath). The study did not look at rules of operation (because of their administrative nature) or at service issues (because service aspects were rarely cited as deficiencies). To develop a quality gauge, I calculated both the total number of items a given property failed and the total number of items failed in each area (see Exhibit 1).

Defects by area. If a hotel failed at least one item in a particular area,

I considered it to be defective in that area. I compared the average market-adjusted RevPAR for hotels that were not defective in each given area against the average market-adjusted RevPAR for hotels that were defective in that area. I repeated this analysis for each of the 12 areas studied. I then tested to see whether the market-adjusted RevPAR differences were statistically significant.

Costly defects. As shown in Exhibit 2, having even a single defect seemed to cost the hotels money. For example, in February 1990, hotels with at least one defect in the exterior had a RevPAR of $3.12 less than hotels with no defects in the exterior. Hotels with at least one defect in the guest room had a RevPAR of $2.01 less than hotels with no defects in the guest room. Hotels with at least one defect in the guest bath had a RevPAR of $1.32 less than hotels with no defects in the guest bath.

Three areas consistently showed a statistically significant effect on RevPAR. Hotels with at least one defect in the exterior, the guest room, or the guest bath recorded a significantly lower RevPAR than those with no defects in those areas. Even worse, although even one deficiency in any of these areas had a statistically significant effect on RevPAR, deficiencies in a combination of those areas showed a lasting and noticeable effect on RevPAR.

RevPAR for Deficient Hotels

Hotels that had at least one defect each in the exterior, the guest room, and the guest bath within six months of February 1990 were defined as deficient hotels, while the properties that did not have defects in all three of those areas during the same period were termed not-deficient hotels. I used the quality-assurance report issued nearest to February 1990 because it gave a snapshot of the condition of the hotels at the beginning of the study.

Based on this definition, 607 hotels comprising nearly 105,000 rooms were classified as deficient, and 528 hotels were classified as not deficient. I calculated and compared the average market-adjusted RevPARs for deficient hotels and not-deficient hotels to test for statistically significant differences. I then repeated the analysis with the same set of hotels for each of the six-month periods outlined above. To be clear, even if the deficient hotels were later found to have corrected their deficiencies, they remained in their original group.

Lost ground. The RevPAR for the deficient hotels was consistently lower than that of the not-deficient hotels for all six test periods. On average, the deficient hotels had a RevPAR nearly $3 less than not-deficient hotels. That average is calculated by multiplying the market-adjusted RevPAR difference by the price index to obtain the actual RevPAR difference for each of the six dates studied. Those differences were statistically significant at the .0001 level (see Exhibit 3).

Revenue Loss

By calculating the differences in RevPAR for each of the six-month periods, one can analyze the effect of property defects on revenue for the entire Holiday Inn Worldwide system or for an individual property. The effect on Holiday Inn Worldwide, of course, occurs because the bulk of its system royalties involves a percentage of rooms revenue from all franchised hotels. To calculate the financial impact on Holiday Inn Worldwide, for instance, I multiplied the RevPAR difference (between defective and notdefective hotels) by the number of rooms available for the time period to obtain the lost rooms revenue. That figure, in turn, is multiplied by the total fees prevailing in February 1990 of 6.42 percent of rooms revenue (comprising an average royalty of 3.78 percent, the average advertising fee of 1.64 percent, and the average reservadon fee of 1.00 percent). I conducted this analysis for each of the six dates and carried the calculations forward for the six months following that date. For example, the daily Rev PAR difference of $2.58 from February 1990 was used through July 1990. This calculation yields an estimate of $20 million in lost system revenue over the threeyear period.

More losses. The above calculation does not include lost revenues for the individual hotels. That figure is the product of the daily RevPAR differential (on average, $2.80 per day), the number of rooms (on average, 200 rooms), and the number of days in a year. Based on this, the revenue loss for the average deficient hotel would be about $560 per day, or about $204,400 per year.

Defects Cost Money

This study demonstrates a direct relationship between product quality and an operation's financial performance, when product quality is gauged by the level of facility defects. Moreover, the study indicates that defects in the exterior, the guest room, and the guest bath are critical, while problems in other areas of the hotel, such as the lounge, the recreation facilities, and the meeting space did not have a significant effect on RevPAR. Even worse, the hotels recorded the greatest number of defects in the three critical areas. To repeat, the defective hotels in my sample recorded a RevPAR of approximately $2.80 less than hotels that did not have defects. This difference was consistent over time and represents an annual revenue shortfall of approximately $200,000 per deficient hotel. The study also indicates where hotels might best invest their capital-improvement and maintenance funds. What seems to count is the exterior, the guest rooms, and the guest bath.

Booking a Hotel Room Online is i-DEAL with Travelweb.com.

DALLAS--(BUSINESS WIRE)--June 18, 2003

Travelweb.com Offers i-DEAL(TM) Rates and Real-Time Availability of Hotel Accommodations from More Than 10,000 Leading Hotels

Introducing Travelweb.com, the only online travel site brought to you by five of the world's premier hoteliers, Hilton, Hyatt, Intercontinental, Marriott and Starwood hotels. Travelweb.com features the largest inventory of discounted hotel rooms and rates direct from more than accommodation needs and delivers a real-time confirmation directly from the selected hotel.

Travelweb.com is the first discount distribution web site to have a seamless connection to each...

...hassles associated with other online travel sites which manually fax reservation requests to each hotel.

"Travelweb.com was created by hoteliers to encourage travelers to feel confident when booking hotel accommodations online. Travelweb has teamed with thousands of hotels to offer the most comprehensive selection of quality hotels and great prices," said Scott Hyden, general manager of Travelweb.com. "Travelweb.com takes the pain out of planning a trip and the unknown out of Internet...

...want to add this to their list of 'must-visit' sites when booking travel online."

Travelweb i-DEAL Display

The i-DEAL Display is Travelweb.com's patent-pending technology that efficiently searches the availability of hotels that match the...to choose," added Hyden.

Customers can refine their search beyond destination city to view "hotel clusters" located near a variety of popular neighborhoods, landmarks or attractions. For example, a customer searching...filter the display to show only hotels that match a specific chain or hotel name.

Travelweb i-DEAL Rate Guarantee

Whenever the Travelweb.com i-DEAL icon is positioned next to a hotel rate, customers can be confident that it is the best rate on the Internet. Travelweb feels so strongly about its i-DEAL rates that if a reservation is made on Travelweb.com and the customer finds the exact same hotel room type at the same hotel on the same dates with a lower rate than Travelweb.com's lowest i-DEAL rate, the difference will be refunded. Guaranteed!

Key benefits of Travelweb.com:

-- Patent-Pending Search Display - Travelweb.com's i-DEAL Display

intelligently matches consumers' requests with hotel rates, availability, and proximity...

...to prevailing rates in that market and have rooms available to book.
-- Hotel Confirmation number - Travelweb.com's seamless connection to each hotel's ...still use error-prone methods such as faxing reservation confirmations to hotels.
-- Last minute availability - Travelweb.com's real-time connection to each hotel's central reservation system allows customers to...

...have a 24 or 48 hour cut-off.

-- Largest 3, 4, and 5 star inventory - Travelweb understands that a great deal is more than a cheap ...as hundreds of independently owned and operated hotels, and the many properties and brands of Travelweb's founders: Hilton, Hyatt, Marriott, Intercontinental Hotels Group and Starwood.
Travelweb and i-DEAL are registered trademarks of Travelweb, LLC.

Note To Editors: If you would like the specific list of i-DEAL rates for your city, please contact the Travelweb.com press office.

About Travelweb.com

Travelweb.com is the consumer web site for Travelweb LLC, a travel distribution company. Travelweb.com offers i-DEAL(TM) rates from more than 10,000 leading hotels. Travelweb.com redefines value by giving consumers i-DEAL rates from more 3, 4, and 5 star hotels than any other online distribution site. Travelweb .com's patent-pending i-DEAL Display technology intelligently matches consumers' requests with hotel rates easy.

About Travelweb LLC

Travelweb LLC is a travel distribution company. Owned by Hilton Hotels Corporation, Hyatt Corporation, Marriott International, Intercontinental Hotels Group, Starwood Hotels, priceline.com and leading technology provider, Pegasus Solutions, Inc., Travelweb offers an innovative, new merchant method for the online distribution of discounted hotel room inventory. For hotel operators, Travelweb automates the distribution of net-rate rooms and brings new efficiencies to the market.
Travelweb.com, the company's distribution Web site, gives consumers real-time access to hotel rooms aavacations.com use Travelweb's seamless distribution network to supply the discount hotel content on their web sites. Additional Internet affiliates will leverage Travelweb's distribution network soon. Travelweb LLC is a private company

Abstract:

A distribution channel is defined as a mechanism that provides sufficient information to the right people at the right time and in the right place to allow a purchase decision to be made, and also allows the consumer to make a reservation and pay for the required product. Effective distribution is especially important for hotels because of their perishable inventories. In this article a conceptual overview of consumer-focused hotel electronic distribution channels based the results of a Delphi study and a survey of electronic-distribution managers from major hotel chains is offered. Both the channels and the distribution nodes that are most important for hotel distribution are identified and forecasts are presented regarding the components that will be of greatest importance. Findings highlight the continued current importance of the traditional distribution channels - those that involve the CRS, GDS, and travel agents.

Text:

We know that the internet has become a key distribution point for hotels, but that only makes a hotel's CRS even more important.

Hotels traditionally use a variety of different distribution channels, including distributing through other properties within their chain, joining marketing consortia or other types of affiliation organizations, or outsourcing to representation or third-party reservation companies. Most hotels also use intermediaries such as travel agents, tour operators, or incentive houses. Increasingly, hotels are making use of the growing range of electronic-distribution channels, which is this paper's topic. In all cases, the objectives of using the channel are twofold, namely, to make relevant and timely information conveniently available to the hotel's potential customer; and to make it easier for guests to book the property in question.

A distribution channel is defined as a mechanism that provides "sufficient information to the right people at the right time and in the right place to allow a purchase decision to be made, and also allows the consumer to make a reservation and pay for the required product." Effective distribution is especially important for hotels because of their perishable inventories. In this article we offer a conceptual overview of consumer-focused hotel electronic distribution channels based the results of a Delphi study and a survey of electronic-- distribution managers from major hotel chains. We identify both the channels and the distribution nodes that are most important for hotel distribution and we offer forecasts regarding the components that will be of greatest importance.

The Role of Information Technology

Information is acknowledged to be the "life-- blood" of tourism, because without information, the customer's motivation and ability to travel is severely limited. This need for information is heightened by the intangible, complex, and interdependent nature of tourism. Tourism products are diverse (in many cases, it is this heterogeneity that makes them attractive in the first place), are rarely purchased in isolation, and can be combined in a seemingly endless range of permutations and combinations. We contend that consumers are increasingly seeking out information in an attempt to minimize the gap between their expectations and their actual travel experience. As a result, for tourism products, the fast, efficient exchange of information has become essential for effective distribution, sales, and customer service. Information technology facilitates this process and thus has become an almost universal feature of the tourism sector. Simply making information available about the product is not enough for effective distribution, however. A mechanism must also be provided that allows the customer to purchase the product. A traditional booking required customers to use channels in pairs--one distributing information to make the client aware of the product and one to complete the transaction. Thus both an advertising medium (for example, brochures or guidebooks to disseminate information) and an interactive medium (such as, for example, a telesales agent or a travel agent to make the reservation) were needed to complete the transaction. As a consequence, this multi-step process was inefficient for all parties. In contrast, IT-based systems improve the process by acting as both the information distributor and the reservations facilitator, allowing travelers to make bookings at a fraction of the time, cost, and inconvenience required of traditional methods.

Electronic Distribution in Tourism: An Overview

While the history of electronic-distribution systems in tourism is well documented elsewhere, a brief over-view of the key issues is useful to place the remainder of the paper in context. Most analysts agree that the concept of electronic distribution developed from internal systems created by the airlines for inventory control in the late 1950s.² Travel agents were subsequently given direct access to these systems, allowing them to see real-time availability and pricing information, and to make instant bookings. At the same time, to help offset their capital costs, most airlines' reservation systems began selling complementary travel products, including hotel accommodations. Hotel companies eventually developed their own computerized systems—central reservation systems (CRSs)—and linked them electronically to the airline systems to give access to the travel-- agent market. In many cases, these connections were facilitated by a "universal switch," which was a translator capable of connecting any hotel CRS to the numerous GDS platforms—meaning that only a single interface was needed between the hotel CRS and the switch to give access to all of the major GDS systems. Despite such improved efficiency, the capital cost of developing and maintaining a CRS was still substantial, and many hotel companies chose to outsource their distribution to reservations companies instead of developing their own systems in-house. The use of destination-management systems (DMS) can be regarded as representing a similar strategy. DMSs distribute a wide variety of tourism products (focused primarily on the leisure customer), are generally government sponsored, and pay particular attention to representing small and independent tourism suppliers. With the exception of a small number of European countries, however, the effect of DMSs has so far been minimal, as they have in general failed to evolve from their initial conception into profitable, self-sustaining commercial systems.

The Arrival of Internet Commerce

Until the early 1990s hotels' electronic channels of distribution constituted the closed user group described above. The channels comprised linear relationships in which systems cooperated, rather than competed, with each other. While hotels benefited from using electronic distribution channels, the channels were expensive and lacked flexibility. Between 1993 and 1997 commissions and other reservation costs (measured on a per--available-room basis) grew from US$429 to US$930—an increase of 117 percent in four years. Such cost increases, taken together with advances in information technology, persuaded many hotel companies to find alternative ways to distribute their product. The rise of the worldwide web as an electronic commerce medium provided just such an opportunity. Tourism suppliers quickly began experimenting with webbased distribution, and the web has had a profound effect on the way in which travel products are marketed, distributed, sold, and fulfilled. For example, the majority of major hotel chains have taken advantage of the opportunities presented by the web. In a survey of the top-50 hotel companies carried out in 2001, over 90 percent had a company web site, with nearly 95 percent of these providing reservation facilities to allow the customer to book directly.' Such sites appear to be highly effective, with the majority of internet bookings estimated to flow through these sites rather than through web intermediaries.' Savings from the avoidance of GDS fees and travel-- agent commissions are thought to be substantial--perhaps as much as US$1.3 billion for the 2000 to 2003 period, representing annual savings equivalent to 1.7 percent of total industry profits in 2000. Perhaps the most significant effect of the web is the rearrangement of distribution-channel partners' relationships, which is still in progress. In addition to cooperating with each other as they did in the past, most have started to compete with each other by creating their own consumer-oriented web sites that provide information and booking facilities. The situation is well summarized by Dombey, who describes it as "little short of a technological stampede. Up and down the traditional distribution chain, ...providers are working feverishly to reengineer their travel systems... to bypass both the GDS and the travel agent to create a direct link with the customer. 117 In effect, each is trying to bypass intermediaries further down in the distribution chain and transact business directly with the customer. For example, switch companies, in addition to fulfilling their role as universal translators between the CRSs and the GDSs, now have the potential and frequently the facility to communicate directly with the consumer over various consumer-oriented websites.

Paradoxically, in addition to there being more competition, there is also more cooperation. Many on-line travel sites sell multiple products (e.g., airplane tickets, hotel rooms, rental cars) from multiple vendors, as their key attraction is that they are "full service" and thus offer to consumers the ability to research and purchase an entire trip on-line from a single site. Such sites need detailed content and reservation facilities, which they can only get through cooperation with other vendors. As a result, non-exclusive virtual alliances are being formed. A good example of both trends is the newly formed Hotel Distribution Systems (HDS), which--in addition to distributing hotel accommodations directly to the consumer through its TravelWeb product (www.travelweb.com)--will also provide the information and hotel-booking engine behind a large number of other web-based travel services, such as Microsoft Expedia--companies that could be regarded as competitors. There is a need to establish a clear picture of the various channels available. Furthermore, hoteliers need to determine which channels are currently the most effective at driving business to hotels, how they compare with the "traditional" hotel electronic-- distribution channels, and which are likely to dominate in the future. We examine these and related questions in this study.

Research Methodology

Two complementary research techniques were used to explore this issue. The unstructured nature of the research problem and the lack of prior empirical research on the subject prompted the use of qualitative-research techniques. In particular, the need to establish a clear picture of a rapidly changing field and the desire to forecast future trends led us to conduct a three-round Delphi study with hotel-electronic-distribution experts to develop a typology of the channels currently available and to forecast the future potential of each for the hotel industry. The panel's findings were validated using a survey of hotel electronic-- distribution practitioners. In addition to helping to establish the industry viewpoint regarding the current status and future potential of each channel, the survey also provided comparison data. The iterative Delphi process involves a panel of participants who give their opinions on the subject under investigation, but who neither meet nor correspond with other panel members. After the panel members answer the questions provided by the facilitator, they are normally given at least one opportunity to reevaluate their individual answers in the light of the group's response. In this study the expert panel was selected by identifying speakers on technology-related topics at major hospitality-industry conferences in the 30 months prior to the study. Based on the events calendars of two academic journals (Tourism Management and Annals of Tourism Research), the programs of 105 conferences were analyzed, giving a potential pool of over 600 speakers. We invited those who had three or more presentations at separate conferences to participate in the study. Our letter of introduction (sent by e-mail or fax) explained the purpose and proposed methodology of the study and asked potential respondents to evaluate their own level of expertise on the subject area using the rating scale developed by Loveridge et al.⁸ Of 46 who were invited, a total of 42 "experts" were willing and qualified to participate in the study. For purposes of analysis, these panelists were classified into five categories: academic, consultant, hotelier, researcher, and system supplier. (Subsequent analysis revealed no significant differences between the opinions of each grouping.) E-mail was used as the communications medium throughout, and an overall response rate of 65 percent was achieved, for a final panel size of 27.

The Survey

The sample frame for the industry survey was defined as the corporate electronic-distribution managers for the top-200 hotel brands, which represent approximately 33.5 percent of units and the majority of the world's hotel beds.⁹ We deliberately focused on chain hotels because they are more likely to use technology-based systems for distribution purposes.¹⁰ The research instrument used was an electronic questionnaire that was delivered by e-mail to 168 individuals connected with each of the selected brands. A response rate of 25 percent was achieved. The respondents represented over 21,000 hotel properties and nearly 600,000 hotel rooms. As part of the survey, respondents were asked to estimate the percentage of total reservations that arrived through electronic channels. Their responses ranged from 3 percent to 85 percent, with a mean of approximately 40 percent. However, as can be seen from Exhibit 1, that percentage varied greatly depending on the market segment. Upscale brands received a substantially lower percentage than did either mid-price brands, luxury brands, or those in the mixed category (too few budget-brand respondents replied to this question to be included in the analysis).

EXHIBIT I

Missing: A Common Vocabulary

In the initial round, the Delphi-panel members were asked to identify the electronic distribution channels currently available to hotels. Their responses revealed a problem naming and defining those channels. The absence of a common terminology for describing electronic distribution became apparent, with a variety of similar terms being used interchangeably. It was clear that a common vocabulary had yet to develop, even among experts in the field. This lack of a common vocabulary contributed to difficulty in concisely differentiating among channels. For example, the term "GDS" is often used to describe a particular hotel-distribution channel. However, GDS-based distribution can occur in many different ways (each with its own characteristics) depending on how the system is connected to the hotel and the customer. It is these routes--from the hotel to the customer through various component systems--rather than the facilitating systems themselves that are important.

Using the concept of Porter's value chain as a basis, we developed an unambiguous system that uses abbreviations for each node on the distribution chain to generate a unique notation to describe each route to the marketplace. Thus, instead of a multifaceted generic name such as GDS, a particular route can be described as, for example, hotel to central reservation system to global distribution system to travel agent to customer, or hotel to central reservation system to representative company to global distribution system to GDS-- based travel web site to customer. This terminology was used throughout multiple Delphi rounds to develop and validate a typology of the business-to-consumer distribution channels currently available to hotels. Exhibit 2 (overleaf) shows the range and complexity of the channels currently available and demonstrates how interconnected such channels have become, highlighting the difficulty facing anyone attempting to manage hotels' electronic distribution. Even though multiple channels have developed, it stands to reason that some must be more important in terms of their effect and potential. To identify the most-important channels, the Delphi participants were asked to indicate their opinion as to the channels they considered to have the greatest effect on chain hotels' current volume of business. The issue was also addressed by the industry survey, where respondents were asked to indicate which channels they felt to be the most important for (1) chain hotels in the industry as a whole and (2) for their own brand. In all cases, a voting system was used, with respondents able to assign multiple votes to a channel if they felt it to be especially important. A comparison of the scores in each of the three situations is presented in Exhibit 3.

As can be seen in Exhibit 3, there is a high positive correlation between each set of scores ($p > 0.85$), indicating agreement among the subject groups about the relative importance of the channels presented. The consensus is that the "traditional" electronic-distribution channels remain the most important for chain hotels. In each of the three cases, the channel of hotel to CRS to switch to GDS to travel agent to customer received the largest number of votes, followed closely by hotel to CRS to GDS to travel agent to customer, and hotel to CRS to customer. However, the importance of the web as a distribution medium is also apparent, with a cluster of routes that use the web to bypass the travel-agent node (identifiable near the top of the importance rating). Thus, despite theories that the web is of minor importance in terms of online sales for hotels, it is clear that both industry practitioners and electronic-distribution experts alike now consider the internet to be a major contributor to volume of business, particularly when all of the web-based routes are combined. Similarly, certain channels (such as those that feature either DMS or third-- party representative companies as a node) consistently received lower scores, indicating the declining importance of such routes.

An alternative analysis is to examine the distribution-channel nodes included in the channels rated by the panel. If a node is counted each time it is mentioned in a ranked channel, those most important as facilitators of hotel electronic distribution can be identified. Exhibit 4 (on the next page) reveals the continued importance of the CRS in hotels' electronic-distribution strategy. In both expert and industry responses, the majority of channels originate in the CRS, irrespective of how they ultimately reach the customer. Industry practitioners' perceptions of the importance of the GDS and the travel agent in hotel distribution can also be clearly seen. Those nodes received far more votes from industry respondents than they did from the expert panel, indicating that the viewpoint from those actually working in this arena is that this traditional route remains the primary one for chain hotels. That said, the node analysis also shows the importance of the web as a delivery mechanism. Both the expert and the industry votes highlight how many channels use the web as their ultimate mechanism for communicating with the customer. Although spread over multiple channels (e.g., direct web site, chain web site, web intermediary, and destination web site), collectively it is clear that the web has become an important contributor of reservations.

In both parts of this study, respondents were asked to identify channels missing from the list. Content-analysis techniques revealed additional minor channels, such as representative-company websites, wholesaler or consolidator sites, specialized websites (eg., meeting or wedding planners), or auction or name-your-own-price sites. These suggestions drew attention to how various third parties (for example, wholesalers, web intermediaries, "rep" companies, and even travel-agent-- based websites) are all likely to influence future business, and further increase the complexity of hotel electronic distribution.

The Future of Hotel Electronic Distribution

As we discussed earlier, hotel electronic distribution is in a state of rapid evolution. Channels (and channel participants) are merging, bypassing one another, while simultaneously cooperating and competing with each other. Which channels are likely to be important in the future is clearly of interest. Given that the pace of change is so rapid, however, a long-term forecast seems unrealistic. For that reason, both groups of study participants were asked to indicate their opinions as to how each channel was likely to grow or decline over a relatively short period--that being the year following the survey.¹² A five-- point scale (anchored by 1 = greatly decline to 5 = greatly grow) was used to measure their responses. As can be seen from Exhibit 5, the positive attitude of both groups is immediately apparent. Few channels are forecast to decline significantly, while an analysis of the overall scores reveals an arithmetic mean of 3.19 for the expert group and of 3.39 for the industry group, demonstrating that both feel that bookings volumes over the selected channels will grow slightly over the period.

Analysis of individual channels confirms many of the trends noted earlier. The continuing importance of the GDS from the industry perspective is clearly evident, with the following channels receiving the highest scores: hotel to CRS to switch to GDS to GDS-based website to customer, hotel to CRS to GDS to GDS-based website to customer, and hotel to CRS to switch to GDS-web intermediary to customer. Conspicuously absent from the above three chains is the travel-agent node. This prediction of disintermediation is supported by the fact that the majority of the channels forecasted to decline involve travel agents as the final node. Conversely, practically all of the channels forecast to grow involve the web as the ultimate node before the customer. In particular, the direct-to-customer routes (hotel to website to customer and hotel to CRS to hotel-chain website to customer) received particularly high scores from the industry group. Furthermore, five of the seven channels forecast to grow significantly feature both the CRS as a node in the distribution chain and the web as the ultimate communications medium with the customer. This seems to indicate how hotel electronic distribution might develop in the near future--centralized through a CRS, flowing through a variety of different routes and third parties, but ultimately being delivered using the web as the communications medium with the customer. It is also interesting to note that there are significant differences in opinion between the two study groups in relation to the perceived future importance of individual channels. While the expert group seems enthusiastic about a broad range of channels, the industry group is more positive about channels that originate in the hotel chains' CRSs. Again this confirms the theory that electronic distribution will be fed from the CRS, and it highlights the likely continued importance of such systems in hotel companies' distribution strategies. While not directly addressed in this research, however, these findings could to a certain extent be influenced by the composition of the respondent groups. Industry-survey participants were for the most part responsible for the management of the electronic-distribution function at the corporate level. As such, they would be biased toward using the CRS as the engine of electronic distribution, since that would help them to retain control over distribution at the corporate level, thus strengthening their own positions (and ensuring their continued employment).

Combining "Forecasted Growth" with "Current Importance"

Of course growth on its own is not an indication of how important a channel will be in the future. A channel identified as having high-growth potential might currently be minor in importance, and despite its forecasted growth might still be less important in terms of generating business than some of the more-established channels. To build a more comprehensive picture, forecasted growth must be combined with current booking volumes to identify those channels with the most potential for the future. By combining both sets of data in a matrix, the future potential of each channel can be demonstrated. Results for the Delphi panel and the industry group are presented in Exhibits 6 and 7 (previous pages). In both cases, the most attractive channels (in terms of their potential to generate high levels of reservations) are those in the top-right-hand quadrants, which combine a higher-than-average current-reservations volume with a higher-than--average forecasted growth. In the experts' matrix, this quadrant includes six of the web-based channels. (Note that distribution directly to the consumer over the web showed the highest potential.)

The continued importance of the hotel CRS is also reflected here. Not only is the hotel-CRS-- consumer route the only non-web channel in this segment, but four of the other six channels also include the hotel CRS as a node. In the industry respondents' matrix, the same quadrant reveals a cluster of channels with distinct characteristics-- each uses the CRS as its first node and the web to communicate with the customer. That prediction lends weight to the theory formed earlier that the CRS will continue as the "powerhouse" of hotel electronic distribution, but that the way in which it will interact with the consumer will increasingly be web-based and dominated by third parties. The second-most-attractive sets of channels are those in the upper-left-hand quadrant and those in the bottom-right-hand quadrant. Those at bottom right currently make a high contribution to hotels' business volumes, but are forecast to decline. In the experts' matrix, only two channels appear in this quadrant, both of which are "traditional" GDS-to-travel-agent routes. This viewpoint is supported by analysis of the industry-practitioner data, which also puts hotel to CRS to customer in this segment. As was discussed earlier, the current importance of these three routes is unquestionable, but it's clear that respondents feel that they will gradually decline and be replaced by alternatives. The channels found in the upper-left-hand quadrant are obvious candidates for future growth. In both analyses, the channels included in this quadrant focus almost exclusively on routes delivered to the customer over the web. Although currently minor in terms of contribution to business volumes, each has well-above-average prospects, and thus are clearly channels on which hotel companies wishing to expand their electronic distribution need to focus more attention.

Web-driven Growth

Our findings highlight the continued current importance of the traditional distribution channels--those that involve the CRS, GDS, and travel agents. In spite of the hype regarding internet commerce and threats of disintermediation, it's clear that both the GDS and travel agents remain critically important in the hotel-- distribution process. These intermediaries have been in use for some time, are well proven, and will continue to be important for the foreseeable future. Hotel companies therefore need to continue to maintain and develop these channels so as to continue to profit from their success. Such channels are characterized by a high distribution cost, however, which may be a factor in the industry's support of web-based channels. The latter now generate significant numbers of reservations for the chain hotels--far more than has previously been acknowledged. Volumes are particularly high if web-delivered channels are considered collectively. Furthermore, channels that terminate on web-delivered nodes are the ones forecast for the sharpest growth. This study has also demonstrated the increased complexity of the hotel electronic-distribution environment, and how channels have become increasingly interconnected in their efforts to be the supplier of choice to the customer. It is likely that this trend will increase in the future, and that the tapestry of channels will continue to grow more complex and become increasingly influenced by web-based third parties. No single channel seems to be emerging as being dominant, and thus it's likely that in the future most hotel companies will have to make use of many simultaneous routes to the customer. While this in itself is beneficial, as it increases the likelihood of the company's product being placed in front of the right customer, it does raise issues in terms of management, control, and cost. Maintaining descriptive information, room rates, and availability data in multiple databases is administratively challenging and error prone, and failure to actively manage such data results in inconsistencies and customer dissatisfaction.

A solution to this problem is suggested by the study's findings. The study shows that the web-- delivered channels that will grow most are those that are driven (from an information and reservations perspective) by hotel-chain CRSs. By feeding each of the multiple routes to the customer from the hotel chain's CRS, data consistency could be obtained with minimum effort. Therefore, hotel companies need to continue to invest in and develop this key technology, ensuring that it can connect to and communicate with the growing number of internet-based systems so as to be able to take maximum advantage of the potential of these developing routes. Although the lack of an industry standard for reservations-- systems communication means that this solution would require the development of multiple interfaces, this is infinitely preferable to the confusion and inaccuracies that would occur if companies attempted to manage multiple channels manually. Thus, developing and maintaining a powerful CRS is the key electronic-distribution issue for the future.

Booking a Hotel Room Online is i-DEAL with Travelweb.com.

DALLAS--(BUSINESS WIRE)--June 18, 2003

Travelweb.com Offers i-DEAL(TM) Rates and Real-Time

Availability

of Hotel Accommodations from More Than 10,000 Leading

Hotels

Introducing Travelweb.com, the only online travel site brought to you by five of the world's premier hoteliers, Hilton, Hyatt, Intercontinental, Marriott and Starwood hotels. Travelweb.com features the largest inventory of discounted hotel rooms and rates direct from more than 10,000 hotels and representing nearly 100 hotel brands. Its intuitive design leverages industry-leading search-and-display technology to enable consumers to quickly choose a hotel that best meets their accommodation needs and delivers a real-time confirmation directly from the selected hotel.

Travelweb.com is the first discount distribution web site to have a seamless connection to each hotel's central reservation system, delivering real-time availability and rates. Customers receive a confirmation number directly from their selected hotel, eliminating check-in hassles associated with other online travel sites which manually fax reservation requests to each hotel.

"Travelweb.com was created by hoteliers to encourage travelers to feel confident when booking hotel accommodations online. Travelweb has teamed with thousands of hotels to offer the most comprehensive selection of quality hotels and great prices," said Scott Hyden, general manager of Travelweb.com. "Travelweb.com takes the...

...of planning a trip and the unknown out of Internet booking through our patent-pending i-DEAL(TM) Display technology that quickly searches and displays the best rooms and rates in a...

...to add this to their list of 'must-visit' sites when booking travel online."

Travelweb i-DEAL Display

The i-DEAL Display is Travelweb.com's patent-pending technology that efficiently searches the availability of hotels that match the destination city and arrival/departure dates a customer requests. The search result is an i-DEAL listing of the hotel rooms and preferential rates which emphasizes properties that offer the customer the best discounted rate...

...work on the customer's part is minimal; the hard part will be deciding which i-DEAL rate to choose," added Hyden.

Customers can refine their search beyond destination city to view "hotel clusters" located near a variety of popular neighborhoods, landmarks or attractions. For example, a customer searching in New York City could choose to see hotels in the Central Park area or the Times Square area. Consumers can also search by star ratings, or filter the display to show only hotels that match a specific chain or hotel name.

Travelweb i-DEAL Rate Guarantee

Whenever the Travelweb.com i-DEAL icon is positioned next to a hotel rate, customers can be confident that it is the best rate on the Internet. Travelweb feels so strongly about its i-DEAL rates that if a reservation is made on Travelweb.com and the customer finds the exact same hotel room type at the same hotel on the same dates with a lower rate than Travelweb.com's lowest i-DEAL rate, the difference will be refunded. Guaranteed!

Key benefits of Travelweb.com:

intelligently matches consumers' requests with hotel rates, availability, and proximity to offer the customer the best value in online hotel booking. The display order emphasizes the matching properties that offer the customer the best discounted rate compared to prevailing rates in that market and have rooms available to book.

-- Hotel Confirmation number - Travelweb.com's seamless connection to each hotel's central reservation system gives customers a confirmation number directly from their selected hotel, eliminating check-in hassles associated with other online travel sites that still use error-prone methods such as faxing reservation confirmations to hotels.

-- Last minute availability - Travelweb.com's real-time

connection to each hotel's central reservation system allows customers to book a hotel room weeks in advance or minutes before their stay; unlike other online booking sites which... discounted rates from so many three, four and five-star chains and properties including: Omni Hotels, Wyndham Hotels, Ritz Carlton, Meridian Oriental, Shangri-La Hotels and Resorts, Carlson Hotels, The Leading Hotels of the World, as well as hundreds of independently owned and operated hotels, and the many properties and brands of Travelweb's founders: Hilton, Hyatt, Marriott, Intercontinental Hotels Group and Starwood. Travelweb and i-DEAL are registered trademarks of Travelweb, LLC.

Note To Editors: If you would like the specific list of i-DEAL rates for your city, please contact the ...is the consumer web site for Travelweb LLC, a travel distribution company. Travelweb.com offers i-DEAL(TM) rates from more than 10,000 leading hotels. Travelweb.com redefines value by giving consumers i-DEAL rates from more 3, 4, and 5 star hotels than any other online distribution site. Travelweb.com's patent-pending i-DEAL Display technology intelligently matches consumers' requests with hotel rates, availability, proximity to desired locations, and star ratings. This, along with the site's easy.

About Travelweb LLC

Travelweb LLC is a travel distribution company. Owned by Hilton Hotels Corporation, Hyatt Corporation, Marriott International, Intercontinental Hotels Group, Starwood Hotels, priceline.com and leading technology provider, Pegasus Solutions, Inc., Travelweb offers an innovative, new merchant method for the online distribution of discounted hotel room inventory. For hotel operators, Travelweb automates the distribution of net-rate rooms and brings new efficiencies to the market. Travelweb.com, the company's distribution Web site, gives consumers real-time access to hotel rooms and discounted rates. Leading third-party Internet affiliates such as priceline.com, Orbitz, continental.com and aavacations.com use Travelweb's seamless distribution network to supply the discount hotel content on their web sites. Additional Internet affiliates will leverage Travelweb's distribution network soon...

Abstract: The consequence of competition between companies in various geographic markets and product lines was investigated in the Spanish hotel industry. The proposition by Bernheim and Whinston that companies with multimarket contact can enhance their profits by reapportioning their market share among the markets in which they are operating was proven by the findings. Also, the exclusion of factors which indicate multimarket contact results into a negative bias on the impact of concentration on prices.

Text:

I. INTRODUCTION

Multimarket competition is defined as 'a situation where firms compete with each other simultaneously in several markets' (Karnani and Wernerfelt (1985)). This situation is present in multiproduct industries or industries with different geographic markets. While the literature has concentrated on different aspects of this phenomenon, such as the presence of economies of scope, demand externalities and cross-subsidization, the effect of multimarket competition on the presence of tacit collusion has received little attention. The possibility that multimarket contact could promote anticompetitive outcomes was first raised in 1955 by Corwin Edwards, who wrote:

'When one large conglomerate enterprise competes with another, the two are likely to encounter each other in a considerable number of markets. The multiplicity of their contact may blunt the edge of their competition'.

This traditional view about the effects of multimarket contact has been recently revised by Bernheim and Whinston (1990), who analyze in detail the effects of multimarket contact on firms' behaviour. In their model, firms expect to compete over an infinite number of periods in a set of different markets and the penalty for deviating from the collusive outcome in any market k is felt in all markets where the deviating firm meets its market k rivals. They show that the existence of this contact may imply that firms not only increase their power to collude in general terms but they may also find it profitable to design strategic policies and redistribute market power among markets where they are operating, so that total profit maximization can be achieved by giving up profits in markets where more collusive outcomes are reachable in order to facilitate collusion and increase profits in more competitive markets.

The main assumptions needed for this type of result to hold are the following. First, there is a set of firms operating in several markets or product lines and some of these firms meet in more than one market. Second, full collusion is not achievable in at least one market, i.e., any firm would have incentives to deviate from the fully collusive strategy given the other players' strategies. Third, either markets differ in some characteristics that affect the outcome of the game, such as the number of competitors and the toughness of competition, or firms have market specific characteristics such as their cost structure. In other words, if the same firms were competing in identical markets, the equilibrium would not be affected by the existence of multimarket contact. On the other hand, the result is robust to changes in the firms' choice variable, the shape of the cost and demand functions and the length and toughness of the penalty imposed on deviating firms.

Phillips and Mason (1992) conduct a series of experiments which support these results. Additionally, a few empirical papers have attempted to measure the multimarket contact effects. For instance, Evans and Kessides (1994) examine empirically the effects of multimarket contact on pricing in the US airline industry. The analysis of the time-series and cross-sectional variability of airline fares in the largest US city-pair routes reveals that fares are higher in city-pair markets served by carriers with extensive inter-route contacts. Similarly, Parker and Roller (1997) estimate a structural model of firms' behaviour in the mobile telephone industry and find that multimarket contact significantly increases collusion. However, none of these papers tests Bernheim and Whinston's hypothesis about the strategic effects of multimarket contact.

The approach we consider in the paper is as follows. Consider a set of firms that operate and meet in more than one market. Assume that these firms expect to play an infinitely repeated game in each market that is determined by the characteristics of the firms and the market under study (the focal market) and also by the number of contacts and the characteristics of the market where the contacts take place (the contact market). Accordingly, we can write the equilibrium value for the choice variable as the result of three multiplicative components, namely its equilibrium value in the stage game, a term depending on the discount factor, and one depending on the degree of multimarket contact and the ease of collusion in both the focal and the contact market. To proxy multimarket contact for one specific firm and market, we aggregate the number of contacts that the firm has in other markets with its competitors in the focal market, giving different weights to the contact depending on the characteristics of the market where it takes place.

For the empirical test of multimarket contact effects, we use a data set from the Spanish hotel industry which includes all the hotels and boarding houses with three or more stars operating in Spain. Our decision has been based on the importance of the chains operating in this industry, with almost 33% of the hotels belonging to a chain. We use a cross-section data base describing the prices and characteristics of 2221 hotels and boarding houses across 83 different geographic markets in Spain in 1996.⁽¹⁾ With this data set, we estimate the effect of multimarket contact on prices by using the generalized least squares estimation procedure.

We obtain two main results. First, our analysis of the data reveals that the omission of variables measuring multimarket contact creates a downward bias on the effect of concentration on prices. Second, the evidence gives strong support to Bernheim and Whinston's hypothesis that in the presence of multimarket contact, prices rise in markets where it is difficult to collude and decrease in markets where it is easier to achieve collusive outcomes.

II. REVIEW OF THE LITERATURE

It is a well known result that firms can achieve more collusive outcomes when they expect to meet and compete for an infinite number of periods. To achieve these outcomes, the firms involved must design a set of penalties for deviating players. For instance, if a firm decides to deviate from the collusive outcome, the penalty imposed could consist of reverting for the remainder of the game to the equilibrium strategy for the stage game, since this is also a subgame perfect equilibrium in the repeated game.

Assume a market where N firms producing differentiated products compete in prices and denote the equilibrium prices in the one shot game by $(\text{Mathematical Expression Omitted})$, $i = 1, \dots, N$. Consider this as the stage game of an infinitely repeated game. Now firms have the possibility of choosing a set of alternative prices. Denote by $(p(\text{prime}).\text{sub}.i)$ the price for firm i which maximizes the present discounted value of the firm's expected flow of profits subject to the following incentive constraint where $(\text{Mathematical Expression Omitted})$ and $((\Pi)(\text{prime}).\text{sub}.i)$ are firm i 's profits when prices are $(\text{Mathematical Expression Omitted})$ and $(p(\text{prime}).\text{sub}.i)$ respectively, $((\Pi).\text{sub}.i)((R.\text{sub}.i)((p(\text{prime}).\text{sub}.-1)), (p(\text{prime}).\text{sub}.-1))$ are firm i 's profits when all firms other than i set their collusive prices, $(p(\text{prime}).\text{sub}.-1)$, and firm i chooses its best response to them, $(R.\text{sub}.i)((p(\text{prime}).\text{sub}.-i))$, and (Δ) (element of) $(0, 1)$ is the discount factor.

Notice that given product heterogeneity the maximum sustainable price, denoted by $(\text{Mathematical Expression Omitted})$, is an increasing function of the discount factor, (Δ) . (2) Assuming that firms set $(\text{Mathematical Expression Omitted})$, where $(\text{Mathematical Expression Omitted})$ is firm i 's monopoly price, then $(p(\text{prime}).\text{sub}.i)$ is a non decreasing function of (Δ) . At any given (Δ) , $(p(\text{prime}).\text{sub}.i)$ will depend on the same cost and demand conditions that determine $(\text{Mathematical Expression Omitted})$. Accordingly we could express $(p(\text{prime}).\text{sub}.i)$ as a separable function of the equilibrium price in the stage game and a function of the discount factor, $(\text{Mathematical Expression Omitted})$, where $(\text{Mathematical Expression Omitted})$.

Bernheim and Whinston (1990) generalize this analysis to cases in which firms meet and compete in more than one market, i.e., there is multimarket contact. The crucial assumption here is that any firm that breaks the collusive agreement in any market k triggers the penalty in all the markets where it meets its market k rivals. Assuming K different markets, the incentive constraint becomes:

i.e., given that the punishment is going to spread over all the markets, when a firm decides to deviate from the collusive outcome it does so in all the markets where it operates.

From this expression Bernheim and Whinston (1990) derive several interesting results. Firstly, for identical markets and firms' characteristics across markets, both profits and losses from deviating are multiplied by the number of markets where the firms are meeting, and the set of strategies that form subgame perfect equilibria remains unchanged. This is denoted as the irrelevance result.

Secondly, when markets differ or firms have market specific characteristics, we can obtain a larger set of equilibria for each market that still includes all the equilibrium strategies available in absence of multimarket contact. In particular, a firm can reach more collusive outcomes in some markets by violating condition (1) so long as this condition holds in other markets as a strict inequality, i.e., when (Mathematical Expression Omitted), and condition (2) holds for the whole set of markets where the firm operates.

Thirdly, firms can do more than this. Assume that condition (1) holds as an equality for all the markets where the firm is operating, i.e. in all the markets (Mathematical Expression Omitted). In this case, firms can reduce their price in some markets so that condition (1) in these market holds now as a strict inequality. By doing so they can increase prices in other markets, violating condition (1), as long as condition (2) still holds. In fact, Bernheim and Whinston (1990) show that firms may find it profitable to reduce their prices in markets where they achieve more collusive outcomes in order to increase them in other markets with more competition as long as the extra profits from the second set of markets are greater than the profits forgone in the first set of markets. This is the most common case since for most demand and cost functions the number of units affected by the change in prices is smaller in the former than in the latter set of markets.

Thus, the existence of multimarket contact not only implies that firms may increase their power to collude in general terms but also that they may strategically transfer their power to collude from very collusive markets to other markets where collusion is more difficult to sustain. Accordingly, we can represent firm i 's equilibrium price in market k as where $(\Gamma)_{(MMC.sub.ik)}$ measures the effect of multimarket contact. According to Bernheim and Whinston's (1990) predictions, we expect to observe $(\Gamma)_{(MMC.sub.ik)}$ (greater than) 1 in markets with less ease of collusion and $(\Gamma)_{(MMC.sub.ik)}$ (less than) 1 in markets with greater ease of collusion.

III. ECONOMETRIC SPECIFICATION

The behaviour of the firms in the hotel industry can be represented according to a sequential decision process. At the first stage, firms decide if they want to open an establishment in a particular location and simultaneously they choose their capacity and quality in that location. Table AI in the Appendix reveals that firms do not change either capacities or qualities for very long periods so that these can be regarded as long run decision. At the second stage, firms compete in prices and earn profits. This process can be solved by backward induction. When competition takes place at the last stage, firms take the establishments' locations, capacities and qualities as given.

In the previous section we have shown that in the context of an infinitely repeated game, the equilibrium price for firm i in market k , $(p(\text{prime}).sub.ik)$, can be represented as a function of its equilibrium price in the stage game, (Mathematical Expression Omitted), a mark-up on this price which depends on the discount factor, (Δ) , and one term depending on the degree of multimarket contact and the ease of collusion in both the focal and the contact market. In turn, the set of (Mathematical Expression Omitted) is determined by the cost function, $c((q.sub.ik), (w.sub.ik))$, which depends on the level of output and the input prices, and market and product characteristics such as the price-demand elasticity, $((\epsilon).sub.ik)$, the market concentration, $(H.sub.k)$, (3) and the product's quality, $(u.sub.ik)$.

The exogenous variables which try to measure all the arguments mentioned above are the following.(4) Among the cost variables we include the variable DD to measure market demand. This variable is included in the regression as an instrument for the firm's sales which are clearly endogenous. To avoid further endogeneity problems in the regressions, we include one period lagged values for this variable. At the same time, this variable controls for market differences that could affect the discount factor, (Δ), for example, the level of demand may affect firms expectations about the future. We also include the variable Wages to measure input prices as labour is the most important input in the industry. The variable Wages is measured at the market level so it does not account for differences among firms in the same market. Accordingly, this variable should be interpreted as a market variable that could also be proxying exogenous characteristics related to market economic activity.

The variable Dist proxies firm i 's price-demand elasticity. This variable is a normalized measure of the average distance in terms of product category between any given establishment and its rivals in the same geographical market. Therefore, it proxies the degree of substitutability for firm i 's services in the same area. Larger values of Dist imply that firm i 's rivals supply worse substitutes for the firm's services and so firm i faces a less elastic demand. We did also control for other characteristics that could measure price-demand elasticity such as the nature of the market but none of them turned out to be significant so that we dropped them out from the final specification of the model.(5)

Concentration in market k is measured by the variable HI. This variable is an instrument for the Herfindahl index of concentration which is potentially endogenous since it includes firm i 's own sales in the market. To solve this problem we use capacity installed as an instrument for sales. Capacity is highly correlated with sales while it cannot be correlated with the error term since it is a long run decision given to the firm when it sets its prices. Accordingly we construct HI as a Herfindahl index using the capacity values.

Two variables measure the quality of the hotel. First, its reported category in the Tourist Guide, which we call Category. Second, the minimum between either the age of the hotel or the time that has elapsed since the hotel was last refurbished, Age. This variable is included in log form in the regressions, as consumers value more age differences between newer than between older hotels. As quality is a long run decision; we consider it as exogenous when the hotel sets its price every period.(6)

For the purpose of this paper, the most important independent variable is the one describing multimarket contact. To proxy this variable, we take every hotel in every market k (the focal market) and we aggregate the contacts that this hotel has in other markets m (the contact markets) with its market k competitors, given different weights to the contact depending on the characteristics of the market where it takes place. In particular, we weight each contact by a measure of concentration in the contact market, HI, because the fewer firms in the market, the softer the competition and the higher the profits. Given that punishments started in more concentrated markets affect firms' profits more negatively, firms care more about these contacts.(7) Then, we aggregate the number of contacts with each competitor from the focal market and divide this value by the number of rival firms in the focal market, thus providing the firm's average multimarket contact with its rivals in that market, (AVMMC.sub.ik).

Provided with this measure of multimarket contact and defining $(\Omega)((MMC.sub.ik)) = \log(\text{greater than})((MMC.sub.ik))$, we consider two different specifications for $(\Omega)((MMC.sub.ik))$. Firstly, which is independent of the characteristics of the focal market. This specification can allow us to test the sign and significance of the effect that the variable measuring multimarket contact has on prices in average terms. A positive and significant sign for $((\beta).sub.1)$ would be consistent with the traditional view on multimarket contact, but it could also be measuring the effects of omitted variables highly related to multimarket contact, such as the establishment size or its perceived quality.

$$(4) (\Omega)((MMC.sub.ik)) = ((\beta).sub.1) (AVMMC.sub.ik),$$

Secondly,

$$(5) (\Omega)((MMC.sub.ik)) = ((\beta).sub.k) (AVMMC.sub.ik)$$ where the assumption in (4) is now relaxed to allow for heterogeneity of the multimarket contact effect across markets. The effect of a specific contact in market k can be stated as a function of the ease of collusion in the market, measured by $(HI.sub.k)$, in a way which represents the transfer of market power. We use $(HI.sub.k)$, which is an instrument for the Herfindahl index of concentration, to measure ease of collusion since most models of oligopolistic competition forecast that the higher the market concentration, the more collusive the output of the repeated game.(8) Following Gimeno and Woo (1995), we specify $((\beta).sub.k)$ as

$$((\beta).sub.k) = ((\beta).sub.1) + ((\beta).sub.2) (HI.sub.k)$$

Therefore, we can rewrite (5) as

$$(6) (\Omega)((MMC.sub.ik)) = ((\beta).sub.1) (AVMMC.sub.ik) + ((\beta).sub.2) (HI.sub.k) (AVMMC.sub.ik)$$

According to Bernheim and Whinston (1990), we expect to observe $((\beta).sub.1) > 0$, which means that in markets with a small capacity for collusion, i.e., low $(HI.sub.k)$, MMC has a positive effect on prices. This effect has to decrease as the ease of collusion, measured by $(HI.sub.k)$, increases, and we thus expect $((\beta).sub.2) < 0$. Additionally, we expect $((\beta).sub.k)$ to be equal to zero for a value of $(HI.sub.k)$ between the minimum and the maximum values in our set of observations. Summing up, the effect of multimarket contact is expected to be greater in absolute terms if the variable measuring the ease of collusion in the focal market, $(HI.sub.k)$, is among either the largest or the smallest in the sample, being positive in markets with very low values for $(HI.sub.k)$ and negative in markets with very high values for $(HI.sub.k)$.(9)

Accordingly, the price equation can be specified as follows

$$(7) \log((Price.sub.ik)) = ((\beta).sub.0) + (\Omega)((MMC.sub.ik)) + ((\beta).sub.3) \log((DD.sub.k)) + ((\beta).sub.4) ((Wages.sub.k)) + ((\beta).sub.5) (Dist.sub.ik) + ((\beta).sub.6) (HI.sub.k) + ((\beta).sub.7) (Category.sub.ik) + ((\beta).sub.8) \log((Age.sub.ik)) + (v.sub.ik)$$ where $(\Omega)((MMC.sub.ik))$ is specified above and $(v.sub.ikt)$ is the error term.

We estimate the model applying generalized least squares after finding that the residuals from the ordinary least squares estimation were heteroscedastic according to the Breusch and Pagan test.

IV. RESULTS AND INTERPRETATION

Table I provides the results of estimating the empirical model. Column (1) presents the results for the price equation (7) assuming that there are no multimarket contact effects, i.e., when $(\Omega)(\text{MMC.sub.ik})$ is not included in the regression. The interest of this equation is twofold. First, it tests the suitability of the model for the Spanish hotel industry. Second, it allows us to compare these results with those that we obtain after introducing multimarket contact effects in the model and to study misspecification effects on the estimates. The coefficients for all the variables, except HI, are significant and have the expected signs. The price is higher in hotels which are newer and of a higher category, which face a more inelastic demand, and in areas where wages and demand are higher. It is important to notice that the coefficient of the concentration variable, HI, is not significant, although its sign is as expected, suggesting that in this industry, concentration has no effect on prices. However, this may be due to the omission of the multimarket contact variable. So, the erroneous specification of the model would lead to wrong conclusions.

Column (2) presents the results of estimating the price equation (7) when we include multimarket contact defined as in equation (4), i.e., when its effect is independent of the characteristics of the focal market. The coefficient for the multimarket variable, AVMMC, is positive and significant at a level of 1%. This result suggests that multimarket contact contributes to a reduction in rivalry among the firms in the industry, which is the expected effect according to the traditional view. Nevertheless, the observed positive effect might be due to the fact that hotels having more contacts, which are those belonging to a chain, are bigger on average terms and have more market power owing to their larger size. In fact, this is consistent with the figures on output, employment and number of rooms provided in the Appendix. Another explanation of this effect could be the policy of giving an incentive, usually a free stay, to a frequent customer after she has conducted a certain amount of business with the hotel chain. The obvious way to control for this effect is to include the size of the chain to which the hotel belongs to as an explanatory variable in the regression. However, this is not possible given its high correlation with AVMMC ($\rho = 0.74$). In any case, this significant correlation strongly supports our hypothesis.(10)

Column (3) presents the result of the estimation when we consider the interaction between the ease of collusion in the focal market and multimarket contact as in equation (6), the variable measuring the ease of collusion being HI. Our hypothesis focuses on the effects of multimarket contact on markets with a different ease of collusion. According to the theory, in the presence of multimarket contact, prices are expected to fall in markets where it is easier to reach collusive outcomes whilst they are expected to increase where it is more difficult to collude. In order to identify this non-homogeneous effect, a linear interaction between concentration in the focal market and multimarket contact is specified. It can be seen that the coefficient for (AVMMC.sub.ik), ((Beta).sub.1), is positive and the coefficient for (HI.sub.k) (AVMMC.sub.ik), ((Beta).sub.2), is negative, both of them being significant at the 1% level. The predicted interaction effects are shown in Figure 1 where we can observe that the effect of multimarket contact on price remains positive until (HI.sub.k) reaches the value 0.19. Given that the sample average for (HI.sub.k) is 0.16 and the sample median value is 0.09, this result gives strong support to Bernheim and Whinston's (1990) predictions.

We should also notice that once we have introduced the multimarket contact variables the coefficient of HI becomes significant. This suggests that the previous conclusions about the role of concentration in the industry resulted from a misspecification of the model. In fact, once we control for the multimarket contact strategic effects, we observe that prices are significantly higher in more concentrated markets

We have estimated the same three regressions for each of the five different categories in the sample(11) and the main results hold for each subsample, though some variables become less significant mainly due to the small number of observations for some categories.

V. CONCLUSIONS

The hypothesis that multimarket contacts increase the ability of firms to attain and sustain tacit collusive agreements in any single market was articulated for the first time in Edwards (1955). In a recent theoretical contribution, Bernheim and Whinston (1990) provide some guidance as to appropriate strategies for empirically examining the effects of multimarket contact.

In this paper, we examine the effects of multimarket contact on pricing in the Spanish hotel industry. In particular, we estimate a reduced form price equation which depends on market and firm characteristics, future expectations and multimarket contact, taking as given variables involving firms' long run decisions. This approach suffers from two limitations that could not be solved because of the nature of the data. Firstly, we could not incorporate data on demand variables so that we could not estimate the structural parameters from the price and demand equations and secondly, the analysis could not be extended in order to incorporate dynamic aspects and endogenize long run decision variables.

Despite these shortcomings, it is possible to derive two relevant results from our analysis. Firstly, it reveals that the omission of variables measuring multimarket contact creates a downward bias on the effect of concentration on prices. Hence in industries where multimarket contact takes place, this type of erroneous specification in modelling the behavior of the firms may lead to a wrong conclusion about the strength of firms' market power in the industry.

Secondly, we find relevant strategic multimarket effects. In particular, in the presence of multimarket contact, prices are higher in markets where it is difficult to collude and lower in markets where collusion is easier to achieve. Thus, we interpret our results as evidence supporting Bernheim and Whinston's (1990) hypothesis in the context of this industry. To our knowledge this is the first time that this hypothesis has been purposely empirically tested and significant results have been found. This implies that antitrust authorities should worry not only about mergers that increase market concentration but also about those that increase multimarket contact among the firms operating in the market, even if market concentration remains unchanged. In other words, multimarket contact should be taken into account when taking antitrust decisions.

APPENDIX; THE DATA AND DEFINITIONS OF THE VARIABLES

The sample is taken from the 1996 Spanish Professional Hotel Guide published by the Instituto de Estudios Turísticos (Institute of Tourist Studies). This data base includes 9482 establishments, distributed in the following categories: vacation city, hotel, apartment hotel, residential hotel, boarding house, residential boarding house, motel, and apartment residence. Given the heterogeneity of the services provided by these establishments, we center the study on a segment of the industry which only includes hotels and boarding houses with 3 or more stars. If we reject those establishments with incomplete data or having been built before 1900 and never having been refurbished, we obtain a cross section sample with 2221 hotels and boarding houses.

The establishments classified as hotels include independent (82.2%) and non independent hotels (17.8%). Establishments in the second group belong to 106 different hotel chains. In 1994, the hotel industry gave employment to 159,000 persons and its output, which is defined as the set of incomes generated from the different types of services they offer, had a value of approximately 7,600 million dollars, representing 1.4% of the Spanish GDP. Hotels belonging to chains represented 35% and 43% of total employment and output, respectively. Thus on average, establishments belonging to a chain are larger than independent hotels.

Table AI shows the age distribution of the establishments included in the sample. We can see that more than two thirds of them are more than 4 years old. Table AII presents the distribution between independent and chain hotels by number of establishments and bed capacity and shows that almost one half of 4-5 star hotels belong to a hotel chain while for 3 star hotels this percentage falls to one third.

In particular, in our sample 32.8% of the establishments belong to a chain. The figures on the number of rooms also show that chain hotels are on average larger than independent hotels. Finally, Table AIII shows the size distribution of the 106 chains operating in Spain according to the Professional Hotel Guide. More than one half of the chains are small, with less than five establishments, but the four largest chains have more than 50 establishments each. This fact gives an idea about the important differences in multimarket contact across chains.

As Evans and Kessides (1994) suggest: 'In empirical tests of the multimarket contact hypotheses, an appropriate definition of the market is of paramount importance.' In the case of the Spanish hotel industry, markets are quite well defined, and there is little ad hoc intervention on the part of the researcher. This is because the Spanish National Institute of Statistics, and the corresponding Department of Tourism of each regional administrative unit provide a division of the Spanish territory in 83 different geographic markets according to the tourism and business characteristics of their different areas. In particular, the main business and tourist towns (such as Madrid, Barcelona, Valencia, Granada, Benidorm and Marbella among others) and mountainous areas are regarded as independent markets. Moreover, in coastal provinces, towns are split into inner and seafront areas, and the Balearic and Canary Islands are divided into different islands and also according to the criteria mentioned above.

The Professional Hotel Guide provides data at hotel level including the following information: city and location in the city that can be either the city center or the outskirts, year of construction or last renovation, number of beds and rooms, prices of all types of rooms, number of stars of the hotel, services provided by the hotel (swimming pool, conference room, 24 hours service, etc.), equipment in the bedroom (TV, hi-fi set, minibar, hair dryer, etc.), whether the establishment belongs or not to a chain, and if it does, to which, and whether the hotels works with tour operators or not. Data on wages and market demand have been provided by the Bank of Spain Research Department, the Spanish National Institute of Statistics and the corresponding Department of Tourism of each regional administrative unit.

Given this information, we calculate the following variables:

Age. - 1996 minus the year of construction or last renovation. We take logs of this variable so we value more the age differences in newer than in older hotels.

Category. - Dummy variable with values ranging from 1 to 5 constructed by ordering the hotels in five categories from lower to higher as follows: 3 stars-silver, 3 stars-gold, 4 stars-gold, 5 stars-gold and 5 stars-luxury.

DD. - Number of stays in 1994 disaggregating by geographical markets, except for Balearic Islands.

Dist. - We construct this variable measuring quality distance as $$(\text{Dist.sub.ik}) = (\text{square root of } ((\text{Sigma}).\text{sub.j}(\text{not equal to i}))((\text{Category.sub.i}) - (\text{Category.sub.j})).\text{sup.2})) / (\text{square root of } 16(N - 1))$$

This variable measures the average distance in terms of category between each hotel and its competitors in the market and it is normalized by the maximum possible distance in that specific market.(12)

HI. - Instrument for the Herfindahl index of concentration which is constructed using installed capacity for each establishment, where installed capacity is regarded as an instrument for sales.

Multimarket Contact. - An instance of multimarket contact occurs, according to our definition, when a hotel i and its competitor j in the focal market k , also meet in a different market m . If an event of multimarket contact occurs $(\text{Contact.sub.ij},k,m) = 1$, otherwise $(\text{Contact.sub.ij},k,m) = 0$.

We define the measure of multimarket contact, MMC, as

$(\text{MMC.sub.ij},k,m) = (\text{Contact.sub.ij},k,m)(\text{HI.sub.m})$ i.e., we assign a different value to the contacts depending on the degree of concentration in the contact market m .

The measure of multimarket contact is the weighted average number of multimarket contacts with the competitors in the focal market which is calculated as follows:

(Mathematical Expression Omitted)

where $T(C.\text{sub.ik})$ is the number of firm i 's competitors in the focal market.

Price. - High season price of a double room (VAT not included) with a full bathroom. The reason for choosing this specific price is that this type of room is most representative of the sample and low season prices are significantly correlated to high season prices $((\text{Rho}) = 0.91)$.

Wages. - Wages for the 4th quarter of 1994, disaggregated by administrative regions, computed as the total payment per worker per month.

This is an extensively revised version of Nerea Fernandez's MSc Dissertation at CEMFI. We would like to thank Miguel Benavente, Samuel

Bentolila, Javier Campos, Javier Grimenó, Richard Green, Jonathan Haskel, A. Jorge Padilla, Richard Sicotte, Michael Waterson and seminar participants at CEMFI, Universidad Carlos III and the Warwick Summer

Workshop 1996 on Modelling Firm Behaviour for their helpful suggestions. We are also grateful to the Instituto de Estudios Turísticos and the Bank of Spain Research Department for providing us with the raw data. Pedro L. Marín gratefully acknowledges financial support from Generalitat Valenciana (GV-3140/95). The usual disclaimer applies.

1 See the Appendix.

2 See Bernheim and Whinston (1990).

3 For a wide class of oligopolistic competition models there exists a non positive relationship between market concentration and price. The joint profit maximization model can be regarded as a limiting case in which prices do not change after the entry of new competitors. Bertrand with homogeneous goods can be regarded as the other limiting case since the entry of a second firm drives prices down to marginal costs. For the remaining models prices fall with market concentration (see Sutton, (1991)).

4 A detailed definition of all the variables included in the empirical model is provided in the Appendix.

5 For instance we included a set of dummy variables for different types of markets such as business cities, sea-resorts, high mountain-resorts, rural areas and historical towns, but their coefficients were not significantly different from each other.

6 In a previous specification of the empirical model, we also included a dummy variable equal to 1 for firms working with tour operators and 0 otherwise. We dropped this variable out from the final specification presented here since it was not significant in the regressions.

7 We contrast this variable against an alternative variable that gives the same weight to all the contacts and we reject the null hypothesis that giving different weights to the contacts does not improve the goodness of the estimation.

8 We have also tried other variables but they provided either worse or insignificant results. These variables are the following. First, the rate of demand growth since rapid growth makes the consequences of punishment (which occurs in the future) more important relative to the gain from deviating (which is instantaneous). So, in a market with high growth rate, the ease of collusion is expected to be greater. Second, the variance of the demand and, third, the entry of new competitors in the market during the last two years since higher instability of demand or a large proportion of entries make collusion more difficult. See Tirole (1988, pp. 245-253) for a more detailed explanation regarding the effects of these variables on the ease of collusion.

9 We have also tested more complicated specifications, such as quadratic functions, for the term measuring multimarket contact but the main results remained unchanged.

10 See Gimeno and Woo (1994) for a test of these effects on the unidirectional coefficient of AVMMC.

11 In these regressions we omitted the variable Category from the regression.

12 We have also calculated measures of spatial distance and size distance which we do not include in the final specification of the model because either they are not significant or they are correlated with other relevant explanatory variables.

Our panelists showed their appreciation for hotel refurbishings begun in flusher times. The biggest gainers: the American hotels.

One would expect the readers of a financial magazine to appreciate capital investment. And it appears that the panelists of Institutional Investor's 21st annual hotel survey do: They named San Francisco's Ritz-Carlton, beneficiary of an $8 million refurbishing, the top hotel, propelling it 30 places up from its rank last year. The Ritz's new look, created with rich, vibrant colors, is eye-popping, too.

Capital outlays bolstered other hotels as well. A dozen or more U.S. establishments added a $12 million spa here or embarked on a $25 million room-revamping there, leading to much-improved performance for American hotels overall. No fewer than 37 American hotels placed in the ranking -- the most ever -- all but five of them within the U.S.

But it wasn't only in the New World that investment produced dividends. Worldwide, hotels that reached into their pockets saw their ranks rocket. Paris's Bristol, for example, shot up from No. 41 to No. 2 after a face-lift on its 50-room Residence wing, and Sydney's Park Hyatt climbed from No. 16 to No. 5 with the opening of its Harbour Kitchen & Bar, overlooking the city's opera house.

This year, as last, 80 hotels met the survey standards, but the top 14 (see table below) turned in distinctly higher marks, largely on the back of enhancements to their facilities. The top 14 scored between 89.0 and 92.6; by comparison, last year's highest score was 89.9.

In the regional rankings (see table, next page), which reflect local travel patterns, the most striking development was the unusually poor showing of Asia-Pacific hotels. Only 14 placed this year, compared with 23 in 2000. But panelists' responses suggest that this had less to do with deteriorating standards than with the region's declining economy, which grounded many a business traveler.

By contrast, the global downturn seems to have had scant impact on European and American results over the past year. This year's ranking features nine London hotels -- the most from any city. (In last year's ranking London and Hong Kong were the top cities, each with seven hotels.) New York comes in second, with seven hotels, and Hong Kong places third, with six. Altogether the ranking embraces 36 cities, from Amsterdam to Singapore.

The human Baedekers who constitute our panel visited a grand total of 601 hotels. Their formula for a great establishment: a good location, unimpeachable service, architecture of distinction and pleasant decor. The panelists also put a premium on fitness facilities, high-tech phones, Internet connections, good television (with CNBC, please), excellent restaurants and large rooms and baths. Luxury hotels offer of the above as a matter of course. But it's how they meld these elements into an outstanding ambience that makes all the difference in the upper reaches of the ranking. The bottom line: How does it actually feel to be there?

"Great" is apparently the predominant answer if it's the Rita-Carlton in San Francisco. The Nob Hill hotel offers fine indoor and terrace dining, traditional furnishings and high-speed Internet connections. If your laptop crashes at 2:00 a.m., don't despair; dial IT room service. Housed in a 1909 neoclassical commercial building that was converted into a hotel in 1991, the Ritz-Carlton has legions of admirers to explain its No. 1 status. The CEO of one New York investment firm likes it "from soup to nuts -- from the rime you pull up in front until you leave." He especially commends the hotel's executive level: a floor dedicated to business travelers, with its own concierge, club lounge and refreshments "so plentiful, you don't need a meal."

Other travelers cited the charms of some other hostelries: three presidential suites big enough to host small summit meetings at the No. 2 Bristol in Paris (a restaurant with two Michelin stars doesn't hurt, either); a soothing view of the Pacific Ocean from your room at the No. 9 Shutters on the Beach in Santa Monica; an ideal mix of service, amenities and mood at the No. 14 Four Seasons in Singapore; a rooftop cocktail bar overlooking Fifth Avenue at the No. 31 Peninsula in New York; a great location, attentive concierge and good value at the No. 43 New York Palace; a superb Mayfair address, impeccable service and exceptional meeting facilities at No. 54 Claridge's and cozy anterooms off the lobby for perusing a newspaper at No. 77 Brown's in London.

Institutional Investor asked more than 100 senior financial executives from 28 countries (who spent an average of 59 nights in hotels last year) to rate the places they'd visited recently. Using a scale of 1 to 100, they ranked them based on facilities, service and style. The scores were then tabulated according to a formula that assigns greater weight to the responses of the most-frequent travelers (a few of whom spend up to 200 nights a year in hotels). The results were averaged, and the top 80 hotels ranked accordingly. To qualify at all, a hotel had to receive a significant number of votes; even consistently well-rated hotels sometimes fail to secure the necessary quorum, which explains the absence from this year's list of several notable hotels that ranked last year, including Buenos Aires' Alvear Palace, the Lanesborough in London and Singapore's Raffles.

The Institutional Investor Editorial Research team compiled the rankings. Contributing Editor Lois Madison Reamy wrote the overview.

Inn-side track

Not all of our panelists' favorite hotels have the broad appeal to attract enough votes to merit a place in the ranking. Here we share some of their tips on undiscovered treasures and cut-price classics.

The focus of the 50-room Beverly Hills Inn near Los Angeles's Rodeo Drive is a "lovely, quiet" garden and pool -- and the bill for a stay tends to be about half that of a mainstream deluxe hotel in LA. Other little gems include Berlin's strictly Bauhaus, 82-room Brandenburger Hof, whose timeless furniture has been shown at New York's Museum of Modern Art; the 28-room Hotel des Armures in Geneva's Old Town, where presidents Jimmy Carter and Bill Clinton have both eaten in the medieval dining room; and Quito's antique-filled ten-room Mansion del Angel bed-and-breakfast, which has a glassed-in roof garden for guests to enjoy breakfast or tea.

In the midsize range Amsterdam's first-class Tulip Inn offers a glass-domed courtyard lobby and canal views from some of its 207 rooms; the luxurious if misnomered Vineyard Hotel and conference center in Cape Town's Newlands suburbs boasts a backdrop of scenic Table Mountain (but no vineyard); Geneva's dignified, polished President Wilson Hotel fronts on the waters of Lake Lemman; London's K&K Hotel George, set in Victorian townhouses encircling a sizable garden in Earls Court, is a bargain compared with its deluxe-hotel counterparts; and Rome's classic Grand D'La Minerva has a summer rooftop restaurant facing the Pantheon.

In midtown Atlanta is an elegant period piece -- the Georgian Terrace -- which has 319 rooms (all suites) and celebrated the 1939 opening of Gone With the Wind in its ballroom. The Hyatt Regency in Greenwich, Connecticut -- just a 45-minute rail commute from midtown Manhattan -- recently underwent an $8 million refit. The well-appointed but well-priced Madrid City Center Crowne Plaza overlooks Plaza de Espana from striking setback balconies. And the Nikko Tokyo, on an island in Tokyo Bay, has 453 balconied rooms and provides dazzling sunset views from its Tempura Restaurant. The five-year-old hotel is just four miles from the fashionable Ginza district.
